Port Washington is a town of almost 30,000 inhabitants, approximately 20 miles from New York City, located on a peninsula that triples its waterfront on Long Island's North Shore. In 1857 the state legislature approved the name of Port Washington, presumably to honor General Washington's visit in 1790.

Port Washington has one of the best school systems in New York state — with a total of six public elementary schools, two junior high schools, and a senior high school that has had three merit scholarship winners in a year and sends three out of five graduates on to colleges.

Port Washington is a boating town with a public Town Dock and various club and private moorings. Hundreds of sailboats and motor cruisers skimming along the water make a gay picture on Manhasset bay. Sailboat racing and surfboarding in the summer and frostbite yachting and iceboating in the winter are popular sports.
